

Demography Seminar

Tuesday, April 25th

12:15pm-1:30pm

8417 Sewell Building

J. David Hacker

University of Minnesota
Department of History

Racial Residential Segregation and Child Mortality in the Southern United States at the Turn of the Twentieth Century

Dr. Hacker is a demographic historian with expertise in nineteenth and early twentieth century census data and the use of indirect methods to estimate long-term population trends and differentials. He will be sharing his new paper authored with J'Mag Karbeah, Assistant Professor in the School of Public Health at the University of Minnesota, examining the association between racial residential segregation and child mortality in the South at the turn of the twentieth century

University of Wisconsin-Madison
CENTER FOR DEMOGRAPHY AND ECOLOGY

Center for Demography
of Health and Aging
UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN-MADISON